

PRESS RELEASE

Paris, 9 July 2019

Amundi and the European Investment Bank launch the Green Credit Continuum programme which aims to provide EUR 1bn for the development of green debt in Europe

- The goal is to ensure better access for European companies and green projects to market financing to speed up their energy transition
- This will be achieved by boosting supply and demand of green finance through:
  - the development of three new segments on the European green bond market, offering attractive yields to institutional investors
  - the creation of a European Green Transaction Network and a Scientific Committee to set and disseminate green standards
- Initial EIB investment up to EUR 60m

With a view to deploying the new financing needed to meet the Paris Agreement targets in the EU, European asset management leader Amundi and EU green bond pioneer the European Investment Bank (EIB) are signing a partnership to launch the Green Credit Continuum investment programme.

Over the last few years the European green financing market has mainly developed by way of green bond issuances from sovereign, quasi-sovereign and large corporate issuers. To finance additional efforts to promote European energy and ecological transition goals, new market instruments are needed that enable smaller companies and green projects to access market financing, as well as offer higher yields to investors.

The Green Credit Continuum programme therefore aims to foster the development of the green debt market beyond the existing green bonds, supporting small-scale green projects, and financing SMEs and mid-caps.

Signed at the Paris Europlace 2019 international financial forum, the agreement between Amundi and the EIB has three components. Firstly, it covers the creation of a diversified fund that will invest in green high yield corporate bonds, green private debt and green securitised debt. In parallel, a scientific committee of green finance experts will be formed to define and promote environmental guidelines for these three markets in line with international best practice and legislation derived from the European Commission action plan on financing sustainable growth. Lastly, a green deal network will be put in place to source deals and projects.

The goal of the agreement is to create several funds based on this model and to help establish market standards for these new green finance segments. It aims to raise EUR 1bn within three years, including a EUR 60m initial commitment by the EIB.

EIB Vice-President Ambroise Fayolle said: “When the EIB issued the world's first green bond in 2007 as part of its “Climate” bonds programme, it made a major contribution to the development of this market. However, despite this fast growth, a significant financing gap persists and huge potential is still waiting to be tapped in some green debt segments. I am happy to be signing this programme with Amundi today. It will help promote sustainable finance in Europe by including new issuers in the green finance market, making them even more aware of environmental issues and environmentally friendly investments.”

Amundi CEO Yves Perrier added: “We are honoured to sign this partnership with the EIB. It offers a particularly innovative investment solution to institutional investors wishing to help finance the energy transition and diversify their sources of yield in a low interest rate environment. A responsible investment pioneer, Amundi is therefore strengthening its contribution to combating global warming.”

To meet its climate commitments under the Paris Agreement and finance the associated energy transition, Europe is missing an estimated EUR 180bn in financing a year until 2030. To reach this level of investment, green finance must mobilise all of the debt capital markets. Against this backdrop, the key role played by green bonds is widely recognised.
